What's Inside:

MAGAZINE .COM JUSTUSBOYS™

FROM JD AND SETH

Welcome to the debut issue of the JustUsBoys.com Magazine! Over the past few years, JustUsBoys, formerly called Link Me All Over, has grown from a sleepy but beloved link directory into one of the most dynamic gay communities on the Net.

Members of JUB, as we affectionately call it, have turned the site into a hub of vibrant conversation and comradery. Now that we've surpassed 60 thousand registered members, many of whom make JUB their first stop everyday, we decided the time was right to branch out into the world of print.

The JustUsBoys.com Magazine is a quarterly publication that explores the topics of interest to those of us who love men and enjoy spending time online. Since a large part of the JUB experience is an appreciation of the naughtier side of the Net, our goal is to help readers find the best of the best.

In this debut issue, we take a look at the facts and fiction behind the move to Digital Rights Management (DRM) by some of your favorite movie websites, and we show you an easy way to resize and optimize your images for online use. But the big news in this issue is our interview with gay porn star Jason Adonis, who has a super secret project in the works for later this year. Enjoy!

IS DRM A DIRTY WORD??!

Digital Rights Management (DRM) is either the best thing to happen to online video or the most unfair technology ever to hit the Net, depending on your perspective.

Digital Rights Management is a catch-all phrase for the various technologies that allow content creators to control how their creations are used. If you've ever purchased music from iTunes® or other online music stores you've used DRM. In its simplest form, DRM is nothing more than a set of rules wrapped around a media file. These rules control what you can do with the file... everything from the number of times you can watch it to how many computers you're allowed to play it on.

DRM is fast becoming a reality for those of us who enjoy watching movies online. We all remember the free-for-all in the early days of Napster when music files were being traded at an astonishing rate. Adult content creators have long feared a similar fate for their movies, and have watched the growth of peer to peer networks with a wary eye.

Since even the lowest budget films cost several thousand dollars to shoot, edit, and package, it's not hard to see why content creators are embracing DRM. Some web surfers, on the other hand, have had a more "tepid" response to the DRM revolution. These folks argue that DRM is inconvenient, cumbersome, and actually restricts some legitimate uses of the content they buy.

In order to function, DRM must periodically "call home" to a server that checks to see if you have the rights to view the content. For that to happen, you have to be connected to the Internet and you may have to enter a username and password to identify yourself. Some customers don't want to be bothered with this routine, but as "always on" Internet connections continue to proliferate, this objection is becoming less relevant.

“The most credible objections to DRM involve the various limitations placed on the customers in the first place.”

Many argue that the restrictions can be too severe since they sometimes limit users from watching their movies the way they want. For instance, some creators restrict the number of computers on which you can play their movies. So if you have a desktop, a laptop, and perhaps a new Sony Playstation Portable™, you might not be able to play the file on all three. In other words, DRM can be setup to prevent you from doing some of things you could do if you were to purchase a physical copy of the video.

When it comes to membership sites, another complaint is that many times the movies stop working when you cancel your subscription. Surfers have argued that they've always been able to download movies to their hard drives to watch again and again.

Content creators counter that since joining a site with hundreds of movies costs much less than a physical copy of even one title, requiring an active subscription is fair for members and creators.

Even if you dislike the limitations of DRM, it's important to recognize that it has had an upside for surfers too. While DRM is typically used to restrict access, it has given many studios the confidence to release their incredible collections online. On top of that, it's helped create inexpensive ways to get great movies into customer's hands. Without DRM, pay per view and pay per minute video on the web would probably be impossible to accomplish. DRM has made it profitable for content creators to let you "rent" a film online for only a few dollars, so in this case, everyone wins.

The bottom line to the DRM debate is that as long as the site you're downloading from discloses their DRM policies to you in advance of buying, it generally works as a good compromise. You get to view huge amounts of great content almost instantly, and the creators have some control of the file to prevent it from ending up on the file sharing networks. It may not make everyone happy, but when done right, DRM doesn't have to be a dirty word.

THE JPEG TWO STEP...

The web is full of downloadable video these days, but good old fashioned photographs are still the medium of choice for the vast majority of surfers. One of the most common questions on JustUsBoys.com is "How do I resize my pictures for the web?" Some folks think you need a sophisticated image editing program like Adobe Photoshop to get photos ready for the web. The truth is there are many user friendly packages out there that can do the job, but none are better than a free little application called irFanView. It's quick, relatively intuitive, and did I mention that it's free?

Once you've downloaded and installed the program, select Open from the File menu and navigate to your photo. When you select the photo you'd like to work on, irFanView will open it and display it at 100% size. The first step is to change the dimensions of the file, so select the Resize / Resample option from the Image menu at the top of the screen.

irFanView has made changing the dimensions of your file very easy by providing several presets that you can select with one click. The maximum size you'll probably need for web use is about 800x600 pixels. Once you choose a size and click OK, irFanView will resize your image immediately and give you a preview.

To finish up, select Save As from the File menu. A window will open that allows you to choose the name and compression settings for your new photo. Make sure the Save As Type at the bottom of the screen is set to JPG and then use the slider to set the Save Quality to about 75.

That's it for the JPEG two step! You've taken a large photo and turned it into the perfect size for the web.

JUBTECH: GOOGLE DESKTOP

Keeping track of all of your documents, email, media, and bookmarks has always been a hassle. Up until recently, most of us tried to organize things by creating folders to group similar items together. It works reasonably well for some types of files, but it's cumbersome and slow.

Google has created a tool that conquers this problem once and for all. Google Desktop is a nifty little application that indexes the files on your hard drive and makes them instantly available via a search interface like the one on Google.com. Whenever you're looking for a file, you type in a search phrase and up comes a list of matching documents which can be instantly sorted by file type.

Let's say you want to find a file sent to you by one of your friends. You type the friend's name into the Google Desktop search page and up pops every email your friend ever sent. Anyone who's ever waited on Microsoft Outlook to search through your email will be pleasantly surprised at Google Desktop's speed. Your search results will also contain your instant messenger chats, Word or Excel documents, images, music files, and any web pages you've visited that mention him or her. In other words, every file on your computer is instantly available with Google Desktop.

Right now Google Desktop is only available for the PC, but Mac users have similar features built right into the new Tiger operating system. Microsoft apparently has plans to offer something similar, but they'll be hard pressed to top Google Desktop's clean interface and amazing speed. Google Desktop is currently free. There's no better example of the ideal boy-next-door, than Jason Adonis. At 6'2" and 240 pounds of muscle, Jason turns heads wherever he goes. He rides around in a Ford F150 and loves the taste of a good steak. He may have put his days of working construction behind him, but he still uses his thick 7 1/2" tool to earn a living.

Jason was born and raised in small town Danville, Illinois. He was into running track, hunting and fishing. At the age of 21 Jason moved to Los Angeles, a big change from his hometown.

He managed to get his picture published in several fitness magazines but being a very sexual person and definitely having the look, he decided to try doing some adult films for Jet Set Productions. He made several videos for Jet Set that became big successes and launched him into porn stardom.

According to Jason, Falcon Studios offered him a contract to become their new Lifetime Exclusive in February, 2004. Jason accepted their offer and appeared in three Falcon movies, but after only 7 months as a "Lifetime Exclusive", Jason realized he was unhappy working with Falcon. Long discussions didn't heal the friction and Jason and Falcon decided to go their separate ways.

Now Jason is excited to start down a new path in his career and hopes his fans follow him into his future endeavors.

We sat down with Jason to find out a little more about what makes this top-rated porn star tick...

“ Spending time with my family and pets is what makes me truly happy. I get pissed off by people in the porn industry who do crooked business.

HE DOES IT FOR THE MONEY...

JUB: Hello Jason. You've been a very busy guy lately. We had the pleasure of seeing you dance at Splash in NYC recently. Do you enjoy public appearances?

JASON: I love it. The support I get from my fans boosts my confidence and spirit.

JUB: What made you decide to make the leap from being a fitness model to being a real-life porn star?

JASON: The Money.

JUB: Short and sweet. I like that. So, what are you currently working on film-wise?

JASON: I am working on a huge project right now. I get to add my own input and some of my idea... kind of like co-directing. I am the star with two scenes and a solo. I probably shouldn't say much more except we will be filming in San Francisco during Gay Pride.

JUB: Is there any other star that you would like to work with and haven't yet?

JASON: It used to be Tyler Gun but Falcon drove him from the business. Seems to be the norm lately.

JUB: You also used to work for Falcon but parted ways. What happened?

JASON: Making porn doesn't seem to be the #1 priority on their list these days. I also see a huge opportunity here to make a very successful company out of Jason Adonis Entertainment. Making my own productions is what I really want to do.

JUB: That's unfortunate, but we're glad to see you successfully launching your own company. Good Luck!

JUST THE FACTS: JUB MEMBER, SOILWORK, LETS US GET A LITTLE CLOSER

Soilwork lives in West Hollywood now which is great because there's no snow and lots of men-in-shorts. He says the worst thing about it is having to look his best just to go to Starbucks and have a coffee. For anyone who has lived in WeHo, we know what he means.

additions include the complete "Stabbing the Drama" album by his namesake Soilwork, Judas Priest's "Angel of Retribution" and a few a-la-cart Donna Summer songs.

Soilwork currently works for fratmen.tv which he describes as the best job he has ever had. "I've never been happier than I am right now...I mean, really, I get to watch hot men whack off all day. How cool is that?" Not surprisingly, he also names Fratmen.tv as his favorite film company. He is also a fan of Chi-Chi La Rue's "BOLT" saying it was one of the best adult films he had ever seen.

When we asked him where he saw himself in a decade, he said that he expected to be taken out in a bar-room brawl LONG before that. Soilwork is a witty guy and has developed quite a following at JustUsBoys.com. Stop by the forums and get to know him.

GETTING TO KNOW RICO SUAVE...

When JustUsBoys member Rico Suave told us to let him know if there was anything he could do for us, we didn't think twice about asking him to share a little bit about himself and his new website. After all, according to Rico, "you guys have contributed so much to my success! Thanks a ton!". Rico started blogging on Just Us Boys just a few months ago, but his sheer magnetism and Just Us Boys following launched his own popular website. Rico makes his home in Seattle, Washington, where he loves the lushness of the "Emerald City" and the cool waters of the Puget Sound. He says that Seattle offers him the opportunity to enjoy nature balanced with the comforts of urban living.

We've all gotten to know Rico's online persona, but we wanted to go a little deeper. we think you'll find him just as interesting as we do!

"I believe there is something in my writing for every gay man. Each one of us can identify with some of the experiences in my life because we're all human."

Rico Suave

WOULD YOU RATHER MAKE DINNER AT HOME OR EAT OUT?

I love to eat out and try new cuisine, but I also love to cook. Eating in is also much healthier, so I'd eat out every once in a while for a treat and cook mostly at home. If anyone is looking for a houseboy, contact info is on my website.

FAVORITE CLOTHING BRANDS:

Express and Armani Exchange.

DANCE CLUB OR PIANO BAR:

I love to dance. I'm hoping to get a gig as a go-go boy this summer when I'm living in Washington D.C. just so I can get paid for what I love.

WHAT'S ON YOUR IPOD?

I have some great salsa music, some Pink, Usher, and of course my theme song Filthy|Gorgeous by the Scissor Sisters!

DESCRIBE THE PERFECT DATE:

I'm not too picky as long as it's incredibly romantic. I like to be swept off my feet.

What's your favorite brand of clothing?

I tend to dress on the classier side, so you'll find me in Express and Armani Exchange most of the time. Lately I've found my style getting a little sexier as I experiment with a multitude of brands. I love to shop, but paying for tuition is my first priority!

What do you wear to bed?

Absolutely nothing.

Tell us about your first kiss.

Ha! My first kiss with a man was in a hotel bathroom.

What are your biggest turn ons?

I get turned on by a lot of things. I'm really attracted to confident men... men who know what they like and aren't afraid to say their mind.

Whats your favorite body part on a partner?

I have a thing for pecs and pricks. The bigger the better. For both of them!

Where do you see yourself in a decade?

I see myself working to find a cure for HIV, and teaching graduate-level microbiology and virology courses at a major university. Oh, and fabulous. I'll be absolutely fabulous.

What's your favorite adult film company?

I really have quite a collection of "adult films" on my hard drive. I really like Falcon for their beautiful men, but Hot Desert Knights is near the top of my list because they satisfy my raunchy side. I've got to commend JustUsBoysClub.com on an awesome job -- they're the only pay site that I've stayed with past the initial month.

You do a lot of blogging, what is it that you enjoy about it?

I blog because it is a way for me to freely express myself. I can write what I feel without worrying about being politically correct. I'm free to let loose on my blog and get things off my chest- from the hot-and-heavy to the emotional and poignant.

Your online persona is kinda sassy. Is that the real you?

Rico is an aspect of my personality that I choose to emphasize. The sexy, sassy, slutty life that readers find online is also balanced by my passion for service, a caring heart, and intelligence. The events in my blog are all true-to-life, but I leave out the less-than-sensational bits. I do hope that my readers are able to recognize that I'm not all about sex, although I can't deny that I love to live it up!

Any final words for our readers?

Feel free to contact me via my site, Filthy|Gorgeous, or through my contact information on Just Us Boys. Be patient if I don't get back to you right away, but I will respond, as long as you're not just looking for a hook-up. I'm always open to meeting new people and making new friends. I think that's about it. Take care guys, so keep it up, hard and otherwise! I'll see you online!
